An email to Brenda from a previous seminar attendee who shows in obedience and conformation:

Hi Brenda, I wanted to give you some feedback on your seminar. I am so very competitive, that if I'm not "winning" or taking the points in conformation, or placing 1st or 2nd in the obedience ring, I feel like a failure.

Well, after your seminar, on the way to my next dog show, I noticed that my leg muscles were tense-didn't know I did that before! My shoulders and arms were tense too. So I tried some of your suggestions to de-tense myself, in addition doing some visualizing.

While grooming and getting ready, I started feeling nervous again, so I used the breathing technique. I also did short visualizations. When I went into the ring I didn't focus on anything but "us as a team" and the judge of course. I stood tall not hunched over, I focused on what my trainer had said, and moved him at a good pace while I hummed and counted under my breath.

We took second in our class and then reserve. No points but I felt amazing when I came out of the ring! I had accomplished what I set out to do - with your help, of course. It was a great feeling!

I took your seminar to heart and it really helped me. Now I keep practicing and setting small goals, not focusing too much on the winning, but being happy and a team with my boy in the ring, and it shows.

Thank you so much for the seminar and info!

About the seminar

The philosophy behind this mental skills seminar is the fact that people are not born with perfect mental skills for the dog sports ring, just as dogs are not born knowing how to perform perfect heeling, fronts or finishes. Ring nerves can be overcome with practice - whether competing in conformation, obedience, rally, agility or any other dog sport.

Saturday will include:

- What competition is
- Why we can experience ring nerves
 - Psychological skill training
 - Ways to reduce stress and anxiety
- Imagery, goal setting and other related topics
- With multiple exercises for everyone to do during the seminar

Sunday will include:

Up to 10 dog / handler teams will prepare to enter the ring, do a brief run-through and then exit the ring in a mock trial. Brenda will coach and support the handler. Other seminar attendees will play the parts of judge, steward, audience, etc. It will be a great opportunity for everyone to see Brenda's mental training skills put into practice.
